Brief Summary and Statement of Need:

This capital request facilitates the development of substance abuse treatment for rural women with children. These facilities often have specialized building requirements to accomodate children as part of the treatment component. Women with children often do not enter treatment if they believe their children are not safe or that they will lose custody of their children. The ability to bring their children with them allows these women to commit to treatment without the disruption of worries about their children's health and safety, or by the pain of separation from them.

Project Description:

Specific facilities need to be designed and built to accomodate women so that they can address many issues not always addressed in co-ed programs. Domestic violence, sexual abuse, cultural relevance, and self-image are some of these major issues. Research and experience in Alaska show that recovery rates for women are improved in these gender-specific programs, especially in those programs allowing women to be with their children.

Operating funds are already available through an FY01 appropriation.

The Advisory Board has advocated for expansion of treatment services in rural Alaska and has submitted this proposal in the past. We maintain strong support for this critical service delivery expansion to an underserved population.
